Learning the lingo

Team Kadena teaches English to deploying JASDF troops

By Staff Sgt. Jason Lake
18th Wing Public Affairs

In a combat environment communication between allied forces is paramount.

That's why more than 25 Kadena Airmen sat down to practice English communication with Japan Air Self Defense Force airmen preparing to deploy to Southwest Asia recently.

Kadena Airmen ranging from senior airmen to majors, paired up with JASDF airmen in corresponding career fields and practiced English conversation for three hours at the Rocker NCO Club Oct. 27.

Senior Master Sgt. Diane Scott-Dailey, 18th Wing protocol superintendent, said she talked to her senior master sergeant counterpart about rank structure, decorations and her role in the U.S. Air Force.

"At first it was very difficult to communicate, but once we got the momentum going I learned that our Air Force isn't much different from theirs."

Tech. Sgt. Ron Berard, 18th Logistics Readiness Squadron, said he heard about the class from coworkers that attended in the past, and wanted to participate before he left the island next month.

"Our group taught them how to ask for a bus while traveling on a military base and how to ask where the restrooms were," explained Sergeant Berard, who relocates to Moody Air Force Base, Ga. next month. "We also got them familiar with acronyms like DFAC for the dining facility."

Senior Master Sgt. Kenneth Trawick, 18th Component Maintenance Squadron, started the program in the spring of 2004. The first class was held just before JASDF troops forward deployed for the first time since World War II.

Just in case...

Senior Airman Maronda Council, 18th Medical Support Squadron pharmacist, helps Navy Petty Officer Ricky Cuevas, a pharmacist from Camp Lester Naval Hospital, fill prescriptions during a day-long exercise at the 18th Medical Group clinic Oct. 27. Sailors and Marines assigned to Camp Lester Hospital relocated to Kadena to test the clinic's ability to facilitate mass casualties and provide services should the island's only military hospital be disabled. According to Capt. Pamela Townsend-Atkins, 18th Medical Group executive officer, the exercise provided valuable insights to 18th Medical Group officials about the capabilities of the clinic during a major crisis.

Gate 2 street closes for Okinawa City carnival Sunday

By Staff Sgt. Jason Lake
18th Wing Public Affairs

Kadena residents looking for something to do this weekend may want to stroll out Gate 2 to experience Okinawa City's International Carnival.

Core values: Coining more than phrases

By Lt. Col. Michael Paoli
Chief, 18th Wing
Public Affairs

When Headquarters Air Force published our core values in the mid 1990s — Integrity First, Service Before Self and Excellence In All We Do—I thought it was just a pithy list of phrases dreamed up by someone who wanted to place his stamp of existence on the Air Force; an outcropping of the then-current 'Quality Air Force' initiative; eye candy for the walls...but nothing terribly new, and certainly not exciting. (Attention during that drawdown era, when we seemed to be losing the previous flexibility in the personnel system, was drawn to the "Service Before Self" portion.) As expected, posters, tri-fold handouts, mandatory briefings and the like followed.

Some seven years later I found myself working in a high-speed international public relations firm in New York City—part of a good-deal one-year program the Air Force offers, called "Education With Industry."

I had prepared by reading the book written by the firm's founder (dead since 1977) that included recurring themes such as "a foundation of integrity," "forthright and understandable presentation of facts," and "policies that are sound when viewed in the light of public interest."

Good stuff. I was excited. What a culture shock.

At some point during my first week on the corporate team, I felt compelled to start carrying my public affairs coin in the pocket of my spiffy new civilian duds.

The coin had some words on it that, unique among other unit or leadership coins, provided a mental crutch for me—a touchstone reminding me that I was not only an Airman, but that, though separated, I belonged to a culture that shared common values.

Small daily events gave me cause to take the coin out and turn it over in my fingers...such as when a colleague found my insistence at telling the truth regarding a client's distribution of potential E. coli infected beef to customers to be unprofessional—"That's not what we do here; we get paid to spin."

Or when a 25-year veteran of the company was rewarded for her service by a last-minute gathering for bagels and champagne in the conference room—no speeches, and the boss dropped in for about 4 minutes.

Or when a 'good to go' news release was kept in coordination longer to intentionally run up the client's bill.

And my wife didn't need an outfit for the holiday bash—spouses weren't invited.

I also found it odd, especially after years of living in a military environment, that there was no visible heritage of this firm that was founded in 1927 by one of the nation's first professional PR practitioners.

No old pictures on the wall, no portraits or busts of the founder...nothing.

In history, I believe, we find the roots of our organizational values.

Yet this corporation's history—some of it quite prestigious and noteworthy—was not promoted in any way—not to clients, and not to employees.

In an office of 175, only a 40-year executive and I had read the founder's book.

I had found myself in an organization void of any pride in, or even remote sense of, heritage, and no shared organizational values—not even verbal.

There were many good people—including senior supervisors—in that Manhattan office who shared similar values, but these traits were in no way inspired or encouraged by the larger, dog-eat-dog culture of the organization.

And so that coin in my pocket—which I proudly displayed during briefings on the Air Force to the firm's Chicago and Washington D.C. office staffs—and the words it contained became my St. Christopher's medal equivalent—a solid reminder of a noble cause, and a great group of Americans.

I never felt more pride in being an Airman than I did during my one year of being cut off from everything I had taken for granted...which included, most significantly, our wingman culture and our core values.

Our wingman culture existed well before General Jumper's push last year, and our core values existed long before they were codified in the 1990s.

They come from the history of those who served before us, but I will always be grateful to those who recognized the need to capture our culture and values in words, and to place them on posters, tri-folds, and yes, on my public affairs coin.

Integrity First.

Service Before Self.

Excellence in All We Do.

Those words describe a unique group of people known as U.S. Airmen—values also shared, in different words, by our fellow service members here at Kadena and around the globe.

I once took them for granted. I urge you not to.

Brig. Gen. Jan-Marc Jous
18th Wing commander

The 18th Wing is very interested in ideas that can make Kadena an even better place to live, work and play. If you have a concern that you have been unable to resolve through normal chains of command, then we'll look into it. Although not required, it's better to give commanders, first sergeants or the agencies with which you have the concern the opportunity to correct the situation first. When that fails, send us an e-mail. Include your name and telephone number so someone can get back to you, and a brief summary of your concern.

Traffic hazard

Sir, please have a look at the traffic accident potential created by the recent placement of the stone wall in front of the new five-story Bachelor Officers Quarters facing Kuter Boulevard. As you exit from either Beeson Street — or particularly Club Street onto Kuter Boulevard — visibility is severely compromised by this new wall. While the wall is attractive, I am afraid it's just a matter of time before the lack of visibility it creates causes an accident.

Thanks for bringing this safety concern to my attention. When first conceived the corners of the protective wall were evaluated for bollards and turned-in corners. Unfortunately the density of underground utilities prevented the use of bollards (which require deep foundations), and turned-in walls do not meet the requirement for stand off distance at these locations. I drove to both intersections to see the problem for myself, and agreed that there was a visibility problem. We moved the stop sign and pavement markings forward so that now drivers can pull farther forward and not have their visibility obstructed. We were able to do this safely, without interfering with traffic on Kuter Blvd.

The Okinawa Perspective

The following is a synopsis of articles that appeared recently in Japanese newspapers.

□ Japan and the United States have agreed to transfer about 7,000 Marines from Okinawa to Guam or other overseas locations as part of the realignment of U.S. forces in Japan. The U.S. Department of Defense has decided to phase down the Marines in Okinawa over a six year period before 2012 or so, Pentagon officials said Saturday. The two countries have also agreed to relocate Futenma Air Station to the coast of Haneko at Camp Schwab. Representatives from the three cities bordering Kadena--Kadena Town, Okinawa City and Chatan--agreed Monday to oppose the joint use of Kadena Air Base with Japan Self Defense Forces, which was recommended in the interim report on U.S. military realignment.

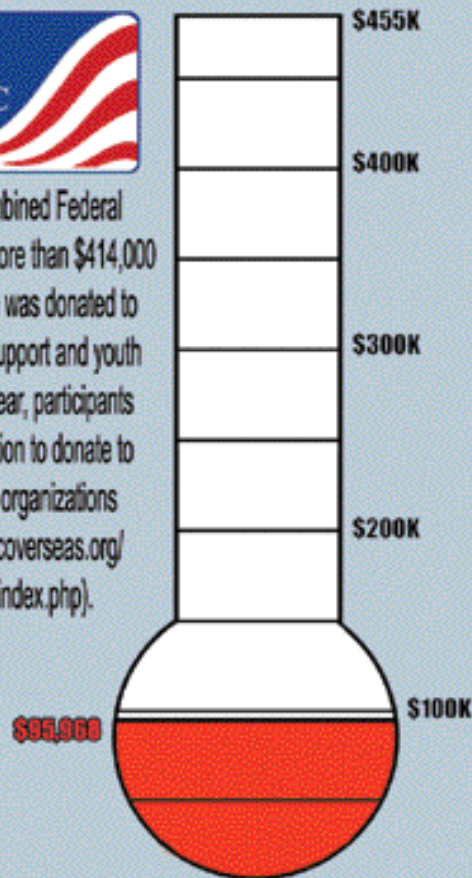

□ A 69-year-old priest belonging to the Nihonzan Myohoji Buddhist sect in Tokyo was arrested this past weekend during a protest in front of Kadena's Gate 2 for obstructing local police in the performance of their duties. In response, about 70 members of a peace group held a protest rally in front of the Okinawa City Police Station Tuesday evening.

□ The Director General of the Defense Facilities Administrative Agency apologized Tuesday to the mayors of Chatan Town, Kadena Town and Okinawa City for an in-flight emergency in which a Kadena Air Base F-15 Eagle sustained damage to a horizontal stabilizer. "It is very regrettable that the incident caused anxiety to local residents. I would like to ask [the U.S. military] to prevent the occurrence of similar accidents."

□ Japan's Ambassador to the United Nations and the North Korean deputy permanent representative exchanged harsh words Monday at the United Nations, just days before the two countries were to resume bilateral talks for the first time in a year. Japan criticized North Korea for not properly explaining matters related to its abduction of Japanese nationals. The North Korean representative responded by referring to Japan's colonial rule of the Korean Peninsula up until the end of World War II and Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi's repeated visits to the war-related Yasukuni Shrine in Tokyo.

Last year's Combined Federal Campaign raised more than $414,000 -- 27,000 of which was donated to Kadena's family support and youth programs. This year, participants also have the option to donate to hurricane relief organizations listed at www.cfc-overseas.org/katrinareliefindex.php.

"The JASDF airmen were paying for private English lessons off base, but the tutors had no kind of deployment experience," Sergeant Trawick explained. "They were deploying to the desert and had no idea about U.S. Air Force acronyms or terminology on how to do business. So, when they asked for help, the rest was history."

The class was the fifth since last year.

Altogether, Sergeant Trawick said Kadena volunteers have helped train more than 125 JASDF troops since the program started.

Sergeant Trawick said he tries to hold a class for deploying JASDF troops on a quarterly basis. Typically, Sergeant Trawick said volunteer positions for the program fill up within the first day of announcement.

"It makes me feel good knowing that I can help put their minds at ease so that they can concentrate on the mission at hand instead of being worried about their English-speaking skills.

A friendly game of soccer: Kadena youth host international tournament

Terrell Sheffey (left), a forward for the Kadena Revolution, dribbles up field as Hayato Kawamitsu, a left winger for the Sakata Football Club, chases close behind. Terrell is the son of Tech. Sgt. Terrone Sheffey of the 18th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron. The teams took part in an International Friendship Soccer Festival at Kadena's Marek Park Sunday along with three other teams to showcase friendly competition as well as to build better relations with the surrounding community. This is the second year the festival has taken place on a military installation.

Teams Sakata FC (left) and Revolution high five each other after a game in a show of international sportsmanship. The two teams took part in an International Friendship Soccer Festival at Kadena's Marek Park Sunday.

Kyle Freaney, a forward for Kadena's Team Fire and son of Col. David Freaney, 18th Operations Group commander, takes a shot on Team Furugen Football Club, during Sunday's tournament.

Goalie Kyouya Onaga of the Sakata Football Club blocks a shot by Terrell Sheffey of the Kadena Revolution at Marek Park.
